The overwhelming volume and complexity of medical information available to us can actually magnify the greatly feared medical terms and jargons for the common man who is unaware of basic biology. The majority of the reasons for untimely medical action taken are the fears associated with the medical procedures. Look around and you will see how many of us are struggling with the volumes of health information available to us. Time and again I asked myself as a professional, why is it so? More information means more knowledge and more confidence and yet why are we more scared and apprehensive? The answer is simple. Most of the information we get is inadequate, either in its quality or its presentation.

Such a situation increases our feeling of urgency as an information provider. We are trying to bridge this gap. We strive to provide medical and health related information that is in the simplest language possible. We provide only essential information so as to increase medical awareness rather than confuse the consumers.

Looking back I feel great pride in what Medhospital Foundation has achieved in the past two years. We would have never reached here without the efforts of all members and the valuable inputs from our visitors. These achievements are assuring us that our efforts are worthwhile.

Medhospital is about life and living. Join us in this beautiful journey.
